PROGRAM

Dr. Sharese King shares her research on the emerging problem of bias against non-standard English speakers, as distinguished from non-English speakers. While it is universally accepted to enlist a foreign language translator when a court user does not speak English, the remedies of how to address non-standard English speakers in court are less clear. Bench officers, attorneys, jurors and court users are often unaware of the biases they harbor when hearing non-standard English, including biases assuming the speaker is less educated, and/or less credible. Dr. King will also discuss the use of African-American Vernacular English and its impact on the criminal trial against George Zimmerman for the death of Trayvon Martin.
