As the U.S. government begins to implement its 2025 immigration policies and executive orders, businesses and organizations are poised to face significant changes that could affect their operations, hiring practices, and overall workforce management. These new policies, part of the administration's broader strategy to address immigration reform, have the potential to reshape the landscape for employers across a wide range of industries. Understanding these changes is essential for legal professionals advising clients in sectors that rely heavily on international talent and cross-border business activities. Topics will include: employment verification, employing foreign national workers, I-9 audits and investigations, global mobility strategies for businesses with international operations and workplace enforcement preparedness.
